Abstract: This collection comprises approximately 10,000 negatives and slides created by Zenzo Nkobi, 5106 of which have been digitised. These images portray the activities of Southern African liberation movements in exile from the early 1970s to the early 1990s. These images cover the African National Congress (ANC) and Zimbabwean refugee and military camps in Zambia and Botswana in the 1970s. These images also show the Zimbabwe People's Revolutionary Army (ZIPRA) military training camps, and rare images of the Freedom Camp massacre and other destabilization raids on Zambian soil by Rhodesian and South African troops.

Zenzo Nkobi also photographed liberation movement leaders at major regional and international conferences, as well as people's daily lives in exile, in Lusaka and Maputo. In 1980 he recorded the return of exiles and elections in the newly liberated Zimbabwe, including rare images of the Gukurahundi (Mugabe's repression of the population around Bulawayo in the early 1980s).

While the African National Congress (ANC) had a photography unit in the 1980s (of which Zenzo was a member), its stored images were destroyed (by water damage) in Zambia in the late 1980s. Moreover, to ensure security, photographers were generally not permitted in residences and camps unless fully vetted by the movement. Zenzo Nkobi, as the son of ANC Treasurer General, Thomas Nkobi, had complete access thus making these images both extremely rare and valuable.

Introduction

Zenzo Christopher Nkobi (birth date unknown) was a South African who went into exile during the 1960s and who worked as a professional photographer in the 1970s and 1980s in Southern Africa. He was the eldest son of Thomas Titus Nkobi, the longtime treasurer of the African National Congress (ANC) who fled South Africa in 1963, and belonged to the first group of ANC students in exile who studied in the German Democratic Republic (GDR) in the 1960s. He received a Masters Degree in photography at the Academy of Graphics and Book Art in Leipzig. Before coming back to Africa in 1977, he worked as a press photographer at the Berlin Publishing House, mainly for the Berliner Zeitung while still travelling to events in African countries to take photographs for the ANC and ZAPU. It was not possible for him to return to South Africa so he lived with his father and the family in Lusaka and later on Bulawayo in Zimbabwe. Here he ran his own photo studio and taught photography at the Technical College. For some years in exile in Zambia he was the personal photographer to the late Joshua Nkomo, leader of ZAPU and accompanied him to many conferences in preparation for the independence of Zimbabwe.

Zenzo Nkobi documented the struggle of Liberation Movements of Southern Africa, such as the ANC, ZAPU and ZANU, Frelimo, SWAPO and MPLA. He photographed the refugee camps and the military camps and many liberation leaders of Southern Africa in discussions, at conferences and elsewhere. He photographed the raids on camps in Zambia by apartheid South Africa and Rhodesia. He covered funerals of victims of raids and bombing attacks, the victorious return to Zimbabwe, the first elections there after liberation in Zimbabwe and later on also events of ZAPU and the situation in Matabeleland under the Fifth Brigade.

Zenzo Nkobi also photographed liberation movement leaders at major regional and international conferences, as well as people's daily lives in exile, in Lusaka and Maputo. In 1980, he recorded the return of exiles and elections in the newly liberated Zimbabwe, including rare images of the Gukurahundi (Mugabe's repression of the population around Bulawayo in the early 1980s).

While the African National Congress (ANC) had a photography unit in the 1980s (of which Zenzo was a member), its stored images were destroyed (by water damage) in Zambia in the late 1980s. Moreover, to ensure security, photographers were generally not permitted in residences and camps unless fully vetted by the movement. Zenzo Nkobi, as the son of ANC Treasurer General, Thomas Nkobi, had complete access thus making these images both extremely rare and valuable.

When he died in 1993 in Bulawayo, Zimbabwe, he left his entire collection of approximately 10000 mainly black and white 35 mm negatives to his wife Edelgard Nkobi, born Schulreich, whom he met and married in Germany.

This collection comprises 5,106 images, scanned from negatives and slides created by Zenzo Nkobi, portraying the activities of Southern African liberation movements in exile from the early 1970s to the early 1990s. These images cover African National Congress (ANC) and Zimbabwean refugee and military camps in Zambia and Botswana in the 1970s. His photographs show ZIPRA military training camps, and rare images of the Freedom Camp massacre and other destabilization raids on Zambian soil by Rhodesian and South African troops.

2008 for inclusion in the Edelgard Nkobi-Goldberg collection - a decision made in consultation with Denis Goldberg, (later married to Edelgard Nkobi). Please contact UNISA archives for further information.

Two other collections relating to the history of ZAPU and ZPRA are:

SAHA collection AL3289 - The Mafela Trust collection;

SAHA collection AL3291 - The ZAPU/Zenzo Nkobi Oral History Project collection

Notes

The images in this collection are digital surrogates of a substantial portion of a unique and historically significant collection of photographic materials donated to the South African History Archive (SAHA) in October 2007 by former Rivonia Trialist, Mr Denis Goldberg whose late wife, Edelgard, had been married to Zenzo Nkobi and had taken possession and responsibility for these items following his death.

Over 10,000 images were given to SAHA, mostly in plastic sleeves within loose-leaf folders, held in cardboard boxes; with some dates and places handwritten on the sleeves (which do not always correspond to the images inside). The donated materials include images from the book Zimbabwe in the struggle, published in 1978 in East Germany, but generally there was very little identifying data accompanying the materials and it is difficult to discern from the negatives exactly what events are recorded in the collection without further research.

About 5,000 negatives were then selected for scanning from the Zenzo Nkobi materials, based on the scarcity and significance of the content of the images, as derived from labels on materials (where available) and from examining the negatives using a lighting box, where possible. These negatives were then scanned, with funding provided by the British Library Endangered Archives Programme (EAP) in late 2008 and early 2009.

Arrangement

Only the digitised images from those donated are described in this finding aid. At a later stage, further images will be scanned and the remaining materials processed and added to this listing.

Original order of the materials has been retained, with box, file and sheet numbers used to indicate the location of the original materials donated to SAHA, with corresponding references used to label all digital copies. Because only a selection of materials has been scanned and the Edelgard Nkobi-Goldberg materials were subsequently removed, there are resultant gaps in the sequence of digital folder and file names.
